the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are illiterate has increased from 400 million to 600 million.

It is not only the illiterate who are at risk of being left behind. The world's population is growing rapidly, and the number of people who are poor is increasing. In 1990, there were 1.2 billion people living in poverty. By 2000, there were 1.5 billion people living in poverty.

The world's population is also becoming more diverse. There are now over 200 different languages spoken in the world, and the number of different ethnic groups is increasing. This diversity is a source of strength, but it also presents challenges.

One of the biggest challenges is how to ensure that everyone has access to the benefits of globalization. We need to find ways to help the poor and the illiterate to participate in the global economy.

Another challenge is how to ensure that the environment is protected. Globalization has led to increased environmental degradation, and we need to find ways to protect the planet for future generations.

Finally, we need to find ways to ensure that everyone has access to education. Education is the key to economic growth and social progress, and we need to ensure that everyone has the opportunity to learn.

These are the challenges that we face in the 21st century. We need to find ways to address these challenges and ensure that everyone has the opportunity to thrive.

One of the ways to address these challenges is through education. Education is the key to economic growth and social progress, and we need to ensure that everyone has the opportunity to learn.

Another way to address these challenges is through economic reform. We need to find ways to help the poor and the illiterate to participate in the global economy.
